About Innovation, IPR and Entrepreneurship

Innovation means to improve or to substitute something, for example, a process, a product, or a service. Innovation, for its part, can refer to something new or to a change made to an existing product, idea, or field. It is the key to the development of a country. A nation needs to develop an innovative ecosystem for its holistic and sustainable growth. Similarly, Intellectual property rights (IPR) are the rights given to persons over the creations of their minds. They usually give the inventor an exclusive right over the use of his/her conception for a certain period of time. The best-known types are copyrights, patents, trademarks, and trade secrets. IPR plays a pivotal role in protecting innovation for commercial benefits. An entrepreneur is an individual who creates a new business, bearing most of the risks and enjoying most of the rewards. The process of setting up a business is known as entrepreneurship. The entrepreneur is normally seen as an innovator, a source of new ideas, goods, services, and business/or procedures. Entrepreneurs play a key role in any economy, using the skills and initiative essential to forestall needs and getting good new ideas to market. Entrepreneurship that is evidence to be fruitful in taking on the risks of creating a startup is rewarded with profits, fame, and continued growth opportunities. The effective use and management of Intellectual Property and IPR is the need of the hour for entrepreneurs and to minimize the risk involved in the new venture.
